This is a Scenarios game, which means that each game is story driven. The players are given backstory with their character sheet at the start of the game, and the story of their character is "played out" over the course of the game. It is played from third person. As a story game, you play the part of the characters, and you must "think out of the box" and find solutions to problems in order to advance your character's storyline. Every problem you encounter gives you experience points. You can use this to increase your character's skills and abilities. If you complete the scenario's goals, you gain additional experience, which is used to increase your character's attributes and skills. The Game Dicey Towers is based on the classic Dungeons and Dragons game, but is played from third person instead of the first person perspective of the game. The game plays best when there is a large group of players, but has a fast set-up time, and can be played solo as well. SYSTEM Setup Each set-up consists of a pre-made character sheet, a Board and a variety of cards. A player has a standard deck of cards called "Trick" cards, which are used to craft a particular scenario and keep track of the 'experience' or points which have been gained or lost. Each player also has a bank of "Program" cards, which are used to provide them with additional abilities as they journey through the game. The game is typically played by five to eight players, although it can be played in larger numbers, or less players for a more social game. Board The game board consists of a fifty-by-fifty-centimeter space containing four columns and eight rows, labeled A to H, and 1 to 10. There are three different colored tiles on the board: Black White Red Each color of tile has three numbers on it, which are in random order, numbered from 1 to 3, and lying in a diamond shape, or in an area about equal to a quarter circle. There are nine tiles of each color. Board #1 and Board #2 Each game of Dicey Towers uses two of these tiles. Players take turns placing each tile on the board, taking the top tile, and then discarding the one that is no longer needed. At the beginning of each scenario, the players pick up the top tile that they have not yet

Was it fun?

Yes, it is fun and shiny and loads of fun. I really enjoyed writing this new game. I had a lot of fun and learned quite a lot about playing an RPG because I had to streamline it along the way to make it in that compact format. Luckily, I also learned a lot about writing a new setting! This is a very interesting and fun setting, and I'll be interested to look at it on a narrative level!

Game Variants

- Do I have an especially keen or overly-compulsive player? I'd love to hear about them!
- Graphically, the game is abstract. Anything you want to add?

What's new:

at Valencia CF (2017-19): Competition WO18-19 The date on which he joined Osasuna in 2011 is etched in my mind and crosses over again every time I read about his departure this summer. Valencia CF announced on Monday that they had fired head coach Marcelino at the end of the season, a decision that was taken only after the club had failed to qualify for the Champions League for the second season running. On opening day of the 18/19 season it was not Fernando Sánchez who took the Valencians' helm, but rather Jan van Breugel, one of the unsung heroes of the club's current campaign. The lack of consistency in the previous edition of the Liga also contributed to van Breugel's extended stay in charge: after an impressive early summer run to the semi-finals of the Copa del Rey, Valencians ended up 14th in the league, almost 16 points out of safety. Changing the coach after one season can work, but achieving that much more after two years can be rather tricky. However, Sánchez's sacking (with him effectively "sacked" being the title of Mourinho's now famous ad hominem attack on the Spaniard) is another example of the growing trend of president José Luis Corrêa to assume direct control of club affairs. Taking the team to the Champions League for only the third time in their history is not easy, and when that task is performed perfectly only the very best clubs have a chance of going all the way, as we are all aware. But the story of 2017/18 has been all about the Valencians finally getting it right in their home league, and the Champions League has been their failure. We repeat our 2016 prediction of Valencians finishing third. Quite a bit of wind in their sails, with success in Ligas Europeas Acorral, de Copa: "Reds" muda español: Sexenio y dos semanas After a rather rocky start in the El alcalde era, the last two summers have been a different story for Osasuna, and Marcelino had a job if he was going to continue that trend. In that sense, the Valencians do not really deserve to be at their eighth European final and their fifth in a row (yep, they also went to Munich in 2013),
