When you use torrents, whether to download or upload, you can be seen by your ISP. There are 2 types of ISPs, broadband and dial-up. You need a dedicated point of connection - a router or modem - to connect to the internet.

Many ISPs have different rates for broadband and dial-up. An ISP can easily identify your IP address. The information is stored in a directory called "who has accessed my records" or something similar to that. If it is disabled, then your IP address will not appear in that directory. However, your ISP could see the IP addresses of those connected to you. What most people are still unaware of is the fact that when they share torrent files, their IP address is automatically sent to the BitTorrent tracker as a sign of interest. The tracker is what keeps the torrent alive and allows it to search the entire network for peers. The tracker will only receive the IP addresses of the seeders. This can mean that one person is offering the file to all the peers in the tracker, thereby ensuring that the whole download remains intact. If a single seed is taken down, the whole network will be left without the torrent. This makes sure that all the peers are acknowledged. The process is automatic so you shouldn't even have to think about the registering of your IP address. If you are new to the Pirate Bay, you may have trouble finding it.

However, if you have been using BitTorrent for a while, it will be easy to find. After registering (free), you will be able to download music, videos and other pieces of software. The Pirate Bay can be downloaded from BitTorrent websites.
