Lightroom 5 is actually a major update and comes with a good number of features, and it's definitely good news. Through the beta-version process, the new features and the new interface have been developed for several months. The new type size settings are already available in the Lightroom 5 update. Also, Adobe still offers the Lightroom CC upgrade with Lightroom 5 included free of charge, and $9.99/month is the new price for the Lightroom CC Full Edit plan. For non-professionals, this may be a bit too expensive and you might be better off choosing Adobe's subscription-based offerings. For this review, I would like to look at Lightroom 5's new image editing features and changes in the Lightroom back-end. Lightroom 5 offers more real-time adjustment features than Lightroom 4 users have come to know, although they have yet to be optimized. There is Photo Stream import, a new 'Streams' workspace view, new histogram features, and overall, a more refined user experience. One of the best things about Lightroom 5 is the new real-time image adjustments. There are three main adjustment features in Lightroom 5: tone, color and exposure. The new sliders will ensure you get the desired effect sooner. The new curves are intuitive and useful, and so is the Smart Preview mode. The 'Preview Improvements' section below will show you how to get the most out of Lightroom 5. I just had a chance to play with the new facial recognition that's built into the latest Photoshop CC. I was able to take a photo of my own deer—and it came out great in Photoshop CC. I decided to start with a photo of my own face, and the service was pretty spot on.
