Fitting a documentary project into your workday is never easy. You can use Photoshop's Filmstrip panel to see exactly what you captured in your photo, and make notes for future reference. Make sure to explore the Smart Brush tool, too. Six years back, I had thought I had bought a laptop computer which was capable of handling all my Photoshop needs, but real-world use had proven otherwise. I ended up having to use a lot of my iPad (or laptop) for such major tasks as editing photos. I've also noticed that the iPad screen isn't particularly suited for extended viewing. It's a bigger conversion factor and one which is even more difficult on a mid-range notebook or desktop PC running Windows or macOS. It is also not great with single-monitor setups. This means that most of my workflow was happening on the desktop. Working on my iPad also meant that I was never close to my high-quality set of tools that I use every day. Most times, I did feel that the iPad was a tool that I kept lying around, but a tool that stayed in my bag. After using Lightroom on the iPad, I found out just how much I was missing. With the smart device, I could work faster and at a higher quality. Photoshop Creative Cloud and Adobe Premiere Elements 2016 were my only desktop applications, so by selecting the iPad Pro, I could finally be as productive as my photos would allow; and that couldn't be more important. It feels like the iPad Pro is here to replace my laptop and desktop. Maybe it can also replace your tablet as well.

The new version of Photoshop also introduces a new 'smart' selection feature, making it easier to select similar objects, making it possible to Make me ... representative of what's selected, say, a person, by selecting a group of faces. For example, you could Make me a representative of the people with ears shaped like hearts. This feature – called 'Smart Blob Selection' – is similar to the Select Blobs and Delete Blobs feature, first introduced in Photoshop CS6 last year, but uses a different approach to improve the accuracy and quality of selections. In addition, Adjust Sharpness and auto color are new features that let users make better-looking images. Professionals get the ability to Create layers-based masks from the Create Guide. With this new feature, for example, you can create a mask that trims out an entire background layer. Photoshop CC (beta) also brings along the Export to Web feature to make it even easier to export projects to the web. The overall Photoshop CC desktop app is 32% smaller than the CS6 release, making it easier to work with, and the new interface looks to be even better for touch devices. For professionals, this release includes a wider range of professional editing tools, powerful new AI image adjustments and other new features. Smart Object (add a layer that blends into the background as you modify it, and let you turn individual layers on and off while the image is open. You can also make layers and groups again and again, and create multiple smart objects from a single group.)
