Grüner [@Porome-interaction]). Other transition temperatures may occur in addition to the shift of the GPM phase. The double-walled structures, shown in fig. 1, are selected as being the most stable for the wt, but the actual number of walled structures depends on N and Z . In summary, we have investigated the ordered structures of a two-dimensional (2D) metallic system with degenerate e-h exchange interaction. The calculation shows that e-h exchange interaction stabilizes a particular type of ordered structures, in contrast with the Hartree-Fock approximation. The degenerate e-h exchange interaction may be a possible mechanism to explain the exotic electronic, magnetic, and transport properties observed in the 2D Cr_3As_2 compound. The predicted nonmagnetic interwall exchange interaction in the 2D metallic phases offers an explanation for the decreasing electronic conductivity and the suppression of the wall magnetization along with the external magnetic field. The nonmagnetic exchange interaction may also be responsible for the low activation energy ΔE of the spin excitations in the 2D metallic phase. The stability of the 2D metallic phase will be affected by the filling of the shell and the amplitude of the e-h exchange interaction. We acknowledge the financial support of NSF-DMR-1410640. [10] P.
